Macromolecular prodrugs have been generally used as a method to develop a delivery system for a hydrophilic drug. The drug-loaded macromolecules are prepared by the polymerization of a hydrophilic monomer using a water-soluble initiator. The prodrug is converted to the drug by either enzymatic or chemical mechanisms after administration of the macromolecular prodrug. The main advantage of this strategy is the protection of the water-insoluble and unstable drug from degradation before administration and the possible increase in drug targeting specificity. In this review, the recent progress in the design of macromolecular prodrugs for cancer therapy has been discussed and discussed.Q: Merge all objects from a list into one object based on property values Say that I have a list of objects var myObjList = new List (new MyObject {Id = 1, Name = "abc"}, new MyObject {Id = 2, Name = "abc"}, new MyObject {Id = 3, Name = "abc"}, new MyObject {Id = 4, Name = "abc"}, new MyObject {Id = 5, Name = "abc"}, new MyObject {Id = 6, Name = "abc"}, f678ea9f9e
